

The Numbers Add Up: Congressional Districts with the Most Charter Schools and Charter School Students

By Nora Kern | May 2014

Public charter schools have become an increasingly significant part of the public school landscape, providing quality educational options for parents and students in hundreds of communities. In fact, one in 20 students now attends a public charter school. There are more than 2.5 million students enrolled in nearly 6,500 public charter schools across the U.S., and demand has never been higher; over one million student names are on waiting lists to attend a public charter school.

As the leading organization committed to advancing the quality, growth, and sustainability of the public charter school movement, the National Alliance for Public Charter Schools works with the Executive and Legislative branches of the federal government to draw attention to the issues facing charter schools. This report breaks down the number of public charter school students and schools by congressional district and state.

The report's findings show that within the 435 congressional districts throughout the United States:

- 25 congressional districts have over 15,000 students enrolled in public charter schools;
- 67 congressional districts have more than 10,000 students enrolled in public charter schools; and
- 102 congressional districts have 20 or more public charter schools located within the district.

This report uses data from the 2012-2013 school year¹. Table 1 shows the top 25 congressional districts with the most students enrolled in public charter schools located within the district boundaries. The 25 congressional districts with the highest public charter school student enrollment span 12 states. The charter school enrollment for these districts is between 15,000-39,000 students. Twenty of the 25 congressional districts with the highest public charter school student enrollment are held by members of the Democratic Party.

Forty-two states and the District of Columbia have laws allowing public charter schools. Table 3 lists these states with the number of charter and traditional school enrollments and schools. Further, the table includes the overall percentage³ of charter schools and students—expressed as the percentage of charter compared to the total public school figure. The District of Columbia, Arizona, and Colorado are the states that serve the largest percentage of public charter school students, while California, Florida, and Arizona have the greatest number of public charter schools.
